PALS WITNESS PLAYMATE RUN DOWN BY AUTO

School Boy Fails to See Machine as it Rounds Corner, And Is Fatally Hurt

SAN FRANCISCO, June 10.—A school boy with a home made "auto" contrived from a packing box and a pair of roller skates was killed today under the wheels of a real automobile, while he was proudly exhibiting his handiwork to a group of boy friends.
Ralph Silcox, 2786 Bryant street was the victim of the accident. After school he hurried home, took his new scooter from the back yard and hurried out on the Bryant street pavement to give it a trial.
The machine was a success. Followed by his friends, Ralph ran it successfully for nearly two blocks.
Approaching Twenty-fifth street a busy intersection, Ralph failed to hear the warning cries of his playmates, who scattered for the sidewalk as an auto driven by Fred Brice, 245 Harkness street, came around the corner.
There was a scream of brakes and then a crash as Brice's heavy machine demolished the home-made scooter and dashed Ralph to the pavement. When the ambulance arrived the boy was still breathing, but when he was carried in the receiving ward of the Mission Emergency hospital there was nothing to write on the admittance book except "Dead on arrival."

ONE KILLED IN CAR COLLISION

Four Companions Injured One Probably Fatally On Sacramento Road

SACRAMENTO, June 10.—Mrs. C. Collins of Rio Vista, was killed, her husband was injured perhaps fatally and three companions, also of Rio Vista, received minor injuries early today in a head-on collision between two automobiles on the River highway near Isleton, thirty miles south of here.

Suffering from a fractured skull and internal injuries, Charles Collins was in a critical condition at a local hospital tonight. Jess Jessen, Mrs. Lilly Ogborn, his mother-in-law, and Mrs. Beale Bauer, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Collins, received lacerations of the face and minor injuries.

The accident took place when the Collins' car, driven from Sacramento by Jessen crashed into a machine coming from the south and driven by J. Nelby of Lodi. The Collins' car turned completely over. Nelby escaped with slight cuts about the face.

Deputy Sheriff Harry Murphy, investigating the case, announced tonight he obtained a statement from J. M. Midgeley of Oakland, area witness of the accident, which said the Jessen was driving on the left side of the road at a rate of 40 miles an hour. No arrests, however, were made today.

Jessen, a restaurant proprietor of Rio Vista, was held for questioning by the Sacramento police several days ago during investigation of the mysterious suicide of his young wife, Mrs. Hazel Jessen. While she and Jessen were, at dinner in a local restaurant, Mrs. Jessen suddenly left the table and returned a minute later with the announcement that she had swallowed poison.

CORRUPTION IS CHARGE MADE IN PENN. ELECTION

Claim That Nomination of Beidleman Stolen and Given To Fisher

(By Universal Service)
WASHINGTON, June 10.—Unfolding a tale of alleged corruption, bribery and a double-dealing in the recent Republican primaries in Pennsylvania that astounded the Senate "slush fund" committee, Col. Charles C. McGovern of Pittsburgh, who handled Governor Clifford Pinchot's campaign in Western Pennsylvania today charged that:

1.—The Republican nomination for governor was stolen from Edward E. Beidleman, the Vanc candidate, and given to his rival, John S. Fisher, backed by the Mellons.

2.—Campaign managers for Senator George W. Pepper and Rep. William S. Vare, Pinchot's opponents, expended nearly $500,000 to "buy" voters in Allegheny county alone by hiring them as "poll watchers" at $10 a head.

3.—About 50,000 voters, or nearly one-third of all the voters in Allegheny county, which includes Pittsburgh, were purchased outright in this manner.

4.—Frederick C. Baird, prohibition director for Pittsburgh, was transferred to Philadelphia, to help Pepper's campaign in Western Pennsylvania.

5.—Approximately 20,000 votes cast for Pinchot were counted for his rivals, Pepper and Vare.

6.—The mayor of Pittsburgh instructed the police to line up for Pepper or lose their jobs.

7.—Pepper campaign literature distributed by Pittsburgh police in saloons and "speakeasies" just before the primaries.

Senator George W. Pepper, who lost the senatorial nomination to Representative Vare, took the stand after McGovern and disclaimed all responsibility for the alleged wholesale corruption in Allegheny county.

THE TRUE MEANING

It is just as well for the workmen in America to appreciate that whenever the "highbrows" in banking and finance get together and begin to talk over America's responsibility to aid in abolishing the economic barriers throughout the world, that what they are aiming at is cutting out our tariff protection to let in foreign low price goods and thus import hours of idleness for American workmen.

This is the gospel preached at the sixth annual dinner of the American Committee of the International Chamber of Commerce.

Obviously, the removal of what are called "economic barriers" is another definition of free and unrestrained commerce between all nations, regardless of differences in standard of living, differences in wages, differences in industrial and economic conditions.

It is far more important for the United States to maintain and preserve its economic independence and its high standard of living than to accept pauper labor goods as payment for debts owed by foreign countries. This country would be a fool to pauperize its laborers for the sake of creating business for foreign pauper labor.

Some Pages from American History

By VICTOR MORGAN

THE ANTI-SLAVERY MOVEMENT

William Lloyd Garrison, of Boston, published the first number of a paper called the Liberator, on New Year's Day, 1831. The Liberator demanded the "immediate and unconditional emancipation of every slave held in the United States." Mr. Garrison was resolved to free the negro, even if he had to destroy the Union to do it. Southern planters, most people in the North and even many warm friends of the negro believed the editor of the new paper had lost his reason, and was at least wholly wrong in his methods.

In the summer following the publication of the Liberator, a terrible negro insurrection broke out in Virginia. Slaves engaged in it massacred over sixty white men, women and children. Garrison's appeals in behalf of the freedom of the blacks aroused excitement all over the country. Gangs of "roughs" broke up meetings called to discuss emancipation. On one occasion a howling mob dragged the editor of the Liberator through the streets with a rope around his body. Only the interference of the police saved his life.

Not hatred of the negro, but fear that Garrison was putting the country in peril caused these violent outbreaks. Many thoughtful men, including Daniel Webster, believed that on the whole it was better to save the union with slavery than to deliberately destroy it for the sake of liberating the negro.

But Garrison persisted in demanding the emancipation of the slaves, Union or no Union. His influence spread and in a few years trade between different petitions praying that slaves be freed and that slave trade between different southern states be stopped. Finally Congress passed a resolution refusing to receive such petitions. John Quincy Adams, then a member of the House of Representatives, denounced these resolutions and insisted on presenting every petition sent to him, sometimes offering two hundred or more in a single day. The discussion of slavery never ceased until the North and the South took up arms to settle it on the battlefield.

EMBROIDERIES WIN NEW HONORS FOR BEAUTY AND SIMPLICITY

Contribute Their Share of Smartness to the Mode, However Exacting May Be the Demand

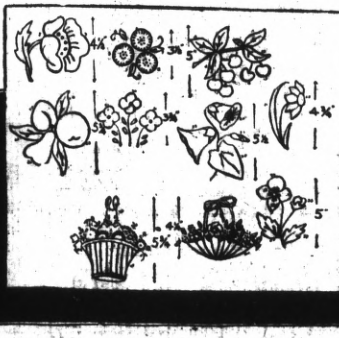

By MONA MULLEN

SAID an embroidery expert the other day, "needlework is like worthwhile men, the greater are the simplest." Which is quite true, for it does not require even careful observation to see that more demands are made upon embroidery this season than ever, yet the most beautiful designs are the simplest and those that can be followed by women of the most limited experience in needlework.

Two handsome examples of what simplicity may achieve with the minimum of time and effort are given. The motifs on the little girl's frocks are taken from a transfer which furnishes duplicates and reverses for ten different motifs, each one equally effective and simple. There are extra cutting guides for appliqué. The designs are pretty, however, developed in either embroidery or appliqué. If appliqué is used, it is stitched onto the background with blanket or long-and-short stitches. Whenever there are dots, French knots or satin stitches are used. The designs are not only appropriate for children's clothes, but for hat crowns, pockets, under-cuffs of sleeves and many other purposes.

The designers of embroidery never overlook the needs of the housewife, for with the number of small apartments increasing, more attention is given to household linens for their decorative value as well as for their possibilities of service. The transfer for the scarves furnishes three different sizes, 12 x 17, 14 x 19 and 18 x 23. The edges of the scarves may be hemmed with linen of contrasting color. If preferred, they are also pretty finished with lace edging. The flowers are worked in lazy-daisy stitch, with French knots or solid satin stitches for the centers. Outline stitches are used for the stems and flat satin stitches for the leaves.

BROKEN HEARTS of HOLLYWOOD

BY EDWARD CLARK

Copyrighted by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

"BROKEN HEARTS OF HOLLYWOOD" with Louise Dresser is a Warner picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Mutually attracted, beautiful Betty Trevilliger and handsome Hal Chutney arrive in Hollywood as prize winners of newspaper contests for movie tryouts. Marshall, reputed to be responsible for many of the broken hearts of Hollywood, takes an interest in Betty. Hal and Betty are depressed and amazed by the number of people seeking work. Movie oldtimers see a mysterious resemblance in Betty to someone they cannot remember. Betty is handed a scanty one-piece bathing suit to don, while Hal, who never rode a horse, finds himself cast with a bunch of real cowboys who realize he is a greenhorn and bait him.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

The director's satellites took up the cry now, "Let's go!" and herded the nonchalant roughnecks into the saloon; but not one of the latter was at all impressed by either the dignity of the director or the pleas and cajolings of the assistants. They went about things in their own, sweet, experienced way.

Hal's confidence and imitative sangfroid had deserted him now as diphtheria melts before the antitoxin. He shook—but he gritted his teeth and resolved to watch the others, and do as they did or die. And those rascally roughnecks, instead of taking pity on the boy's pathetic inexperience, took huge delight in waiting for his downfall.

Their sense of humor was amply rewarded, and before long, for ced beating, set his lips and held his breath, and was swept along out of the saloon and toward the horses. He never knew how he did it, but in some way he found and unlashed an animal and after a great leap suddenly felt himself floundering full upon the back of a bucking, snorting horse.

He did not know what to do next. His feet were hopelessly groping for stirrups that were nowhere within reach, his hands were waving upon bridle reins without rhyme or reason. The horse took the decision out of Hal's mind. He was a wise and experienced horse, that one; and his horse sense, far and away superior to Hal's ungainly clambering, told him to rush after the other horses, which were now in full cry down the dusty field, while the camera "panned" after them.

Above the roar and thunder of hoofs, yells of cowboys, moans of horses, the director was dancing up and down like a madman on the wreck of his megaphone, yelling "Cut!—Cut!—Cut!" and pointing apoplectically at the assistants who were yelling "Cut," and running after the cowboys and blowing whistles. The cameramen were groaning and swearing. The lookers-on were shrieking with laughter. And all at the spectacle of Hal's antics with and upon his horse. Not a movement of it had been missed by the crowd and the camera.

Hal maintained his pitching seat for perhaps fifty feet from the start, and suddenly found himself on the ground in a swirl of dust, with flicking hoofs grazing his head.

Hurt in body and soul, humiliated, he painfully picked himself up to face the insane rage of the director, who ran down to curse into his face; and the look of the cowboys, who rode back leisurely now to enjoy the last of the fun.

"Get off this lot and stay off!" roared the director into Hal's grimed, burning face. Then, to one of his assistants, "Tell Cameron I'll quit on the spot. If he ever again sends me any more drug store cowboys!"

And Hal crept sadly, disconsolately away, dodging with averted head in back of the laughing crowd.

CHAPTER VII

Dressing Room Number 20, into which Betty meanwhile had been ushered by the harmonica-voiced Pearl, was different from the one in which Hal had met his cowboys only by grace; and the little refinements that always set apart a room or place inhabited solely by women; in this case the touches, save for the trivial sex differences in neatness, were garish ones—two or three dilapidated wicker chairs stolen from sets from time to time by the "regular" extras; a thin fringe of cretonne curtains put up voluntarily by the kindly Wardrobe woman, Mother Fredericks, after hours; and a few knickknacks "lifted" by various fair fingers in various unfair ways—pictures, artificial flowers.

As to flowers, it was the custom of one of the patronizing "great stars" of the Amalgamated Studios to send down each day to the women's dressing rooms, bunches of cut flowers of which she was the recipient from adle-pated admirers. The cynical extra girls met this concession habitually, by flinging the flowers out the window promptly, accompanied by certain profane comments on this star in particular and all stars in general. Betty had been just too late to witness this ceremony of star flinging the flowers out the window, but she had seen Pearl kicked open the door and ushered her in.

"Girls, here's another papa's darling come to play in pictures," what ensued was a matter of studio chronicle and anecdote for the full traditional nine days of wonder. When Hal got inside the saloon set doorway he found it, like Mother Hubbard's cupboard, bare; a "flat" placed opposite the doorway and windows, where the camera angle from the outside included those apertures, gave a pictorial sense of a complete interior. However, as there were no interior shots of this saloon called for in the picture, the inside remained nothing but a puzzle of fallen props and debris and studding.

Skinner, famous star of "Westerns," whom Hal had worshipped on the screen back in Centipede, stood in the center of the set alone in all his formal glory, disdainful to notice any of the genuine cowpunchers. As for him, his cowpunching had been confined to a barber shop back in Hoboken. But he had entered the pictures twelve years ago, when miracles were more frequent than now. Hal forgot his trembling for a moment to thrill at his first sight of a great star in the flesh; Hal did not share the ribald contempt of the real cowpunchers around him, who made caustic comments under their breaths on "old Lady Legs," as Skinner was known to them.

Then things began to happen—and so fast that Hal forever after had but a faint and jumbled recollection of their sequence. At a bark from the director outside, Skinner dashed carefully out of the saloon. During a long instant, which Hal felt must be akin to that undergone by a man just strapped into the electric chair and awaiting the jolt of the juice, everyone fell silent and teared for action. It came—the shot! Yelling like madmen, gesticulating with all the fervor and ability that long experience had taught them how to register "uprighteous Western wrath" upon the screen, the cowboys surged and tumbled out of the saloon door.

With a roaring and shouting and a mad clattering of stamping hoofs as the stampeded horses, unthehered, reared and plunged and were yanked and directed into the proper course, the vaulting cowboys mounted and charged away. Hal, with his heart almost stop-

Olive Borden Is Starring in New Fox Film

One of the things which goes to make "Yellow Fingers," Fox Film adaptation of Gene Wright's novel, a great success is the true-to-life quality of the minor characterizations, which will be noted by the patrons of the Richmond Theatre today and tomorrow.

May Foster gives one of these in the part of Antonette, proprietress of the cafe in which Saina, the little half-caste girl in the story, dances. John Wallace and Charles Newton, cronies and disreputable-looking sailors from the ship of "Brute" Shane, add another deft character touch.

"Yellow Fingers" is Olive Borden's first starring vehicle for Fox Films. In it she is Saina, the spirited little girl of the story, who has been raised in ignorance of the fact that she is a half-caste. Ralph Ince plays the role of the square-jawed sea captain, whose one weakness is his love for Saina.

Others in the cast are Edward Kiel, Otto Matson, Ned de Luca, Her. Armand Kolitz, Claire Adams and Josephine Crowell. Emmett Flynn directed the production.

Other features on the same program include "Weak But Willing," a Walter Hiers comedy; "Cris Cross Cruise," a screen novelty;...

Synthetic Belch Of Mt. Diablo Very Possible

MARTINEZ, June 10.—The proposed synthetic eruption of Mount Diablo, reputed to be an extinct volcano, may be permitted under state supervision, if proper precautions are taken to protect surrounding property from fire damage, State Forester M. B. Pratt announced today.

The state forester, who halted plans for the mechanical eruption a week ago, declared that he had reconsidered the matter and had dispatched a ranger to confer with sponsors of the spectacle to determine whether the exhibition could be conducted with safety.

Plans of the committee in charge of the (Diablo) Valley "Apricot festival, which opens June 18 call for a nightly eruption during the three-day celebration.

Motorcycle Taxis Used in Berlin

(By Universal Service)

BERLIN, June 10.—A taxicab war has been raging in Berlin for more than six months.

The result has been two-fold: Fares are going down.

Taxicabs are becoming smaller.

The limit for smallness has been reached with a motorcycle taxicab. It carries only one passenger who sits in a side-car with a regular closed body. It is only for slender people, however.

The fare for the motorcycle taxi is only 50 per cent of the regular fare. Nine cents for the first 400 meters, six cents for every kilometer thereafter.

The motorcycle taxis run only till midnight. After that, it is assumed every Berliner still abroad has a partner with him.

Most taxis charge only seventy-five per cent of the regular fare, especially the numerous two-seater auto taxis that are also not built for stunts.

The full fare is charged only by some big and fancy taxicabs and those which frequent railroad stations on which foreign tourists arrive.

Of the total of 6,489 taxicabs in Berlin, 125 are motorcycle taxis. One company now plans to introduce 500 tricycle taxis, big enough for two which will run on the motorcycle tariff.

Vienna Man Says He Invented the Phototelegraph

By O. D. TOLJISCHUS (By Universal Service)

VIENNA, June 10.—While the picture telegraph and the picture radiograph are revolutionizing modern communication, the man claimed to be the first inventor of the picture telegraph is living poor and forgotten in Vienna.

He is Ludwig Tschöner, formerly professor of the Graphic Institute in Vienna. He patented the first phototelegraph in Vienna in 1909.

In 1912 he sent the first telegraph picture ever flashed over the wires. It was a photograph of the late Emperor Franz Joseph, which is now in the portrait collection of the Hapsburg-Lorraine library.

During the war Professor Tschöner offered his invention to the Austrian army command and as a demonstration telegraphed pictures directly from the front trenches. But just as Napoleon rejected the steamship that would have brought his troops to England, so the Austrian army command rejected this invention, largely, Professor Tschöner charges, because of the personal spite of a Major Pramböck.

Invention Rejected.

Major Pramböck, to whom the invention was referred for an expert opinion, rejected it. Professor Tschöner recounts, in the Vienna "Stunde," on the ground that the war wouldn't last long, and that for that reason there was no use to spend money for such apparatus. All through the war, Professor Tschöner says, Major Pramböck sabotaged the invention in order not to be forced to reserve himself, and even caused the inventor to be sent to the front ranks so that he would be shot.

When, says Tschöner, he succeeded in demonstrating the apparatus before Emperor Carl, and the emperor immediately ordered the construction of such apparatus, the Austrian army command refused to furnish the money to build them.

Experiments Interrupted.

The revolution put an end to the experiments in Austria.

In 1918, Tschöner says, the German army command took up the invention and advance 100,000 marks, but the revolution came before the apparatus were completed.

After that Tschöner went to America at the suggestion of the American Military Attaché in Vienna, and demonstrated his apparatus before the American military authorities in Washington.

The American Government, he says, negotiated with him for months about the purchase, but finally, Tschöner charges, decided to purchase a "re-markably similar" apparatus built by a captain who was a member of the commission that had tested Tschöner's apparatus and knew every detail of its construction.

MARRIAGE LAW TO BE CHANGED BY RUSSIANS

By LAURA PATRICK

MOSCOW, June 10.—Men usually vote "no" on the proposal to make marriage de facto as legally binding as the licensed variety.

This has been brought out in the debates now in session all over Russia on the marriage problem. Women on the other hand, favor curbing the promiscuity of the man by making him shoulder the responsibility for supporting all offspring, whether born in or out of registered wedlock.

A change in the Soviet marriage law is due, which probably will make de facto marriage on a level with the duly registered union. At any rate, for the present, the question has been referred to the people for discussion, and they have never found a subject more after their own heart.

One disgruntled man in Orloff wrote a letter to "Pravda" saying sourly: "Women are just catching men in a trap to get a good percent of their wages. The alimony law is a little bit lame." Thus testifying that he thought the marriage laws lax enough as they are.

Blame The Women

In Ulanovsk the men agreed in a mass meeting that: "Such marriage laws merely increase the misdeeds of the women. They have begun to demand alimony from men who are not at all at fault. Of course they always choose dupes from whom they can get the biggest sum."

In another section of the country the masculine element banded together and decided that in case of divorce the property should not be divided, "since the husband alone had made the family fortune." This was to protect poor men from ambitious women who marry for a short time, hoping to make the court give them a good share of the family possessions when the time for divorce came around.

A committee of women in the Viatka district drew up a resolution saying: "Marriage de facto must be recognized. The court must remind the lover about his responsibilities as a husband for we can't get away from the truth that a union de facto is a marriage. Those who say that making such marriages equal with registered marriage will not abolish polygamy, are wrong."

Forget Polygamy

"If a man must support all offspring he will look in his pocket and forget all about polygamy."

Peasant men as a whole are dead set against being responsible for any children except those born in registered marriage. Also, early marriages are frowned upon in the villages. Here is a characteristic resolution of one of the villages of the Ulanovskaya district: "A registered marriage is the only lawful marriage. In case of divorce the marriage property should be divided, only if the couple has lived together for three years. Then the wife should get half."

From these resolutions and discussions of the people the Soviet law-makers hope to understand what the average person would consider a just marriage law.

Desert Sheiks Are Gentlemen Says Novelist

By ROBERT J. PREW (By Universal Service)

LONDON, June 10.—The sheik is a perfect domesticated gentleman. We have it now on the authority of Mrs. C. N. Williamson, the novelist, who has just returned from a two months' visit to the harem of Arabia.

"If ever a New York girl were to meet a genuine sheik of the desert," says Mrs. Williamson, "she would probably hasten home to the only sheiks who have the ability to give the home-bred variety. The eastern sheik is not half so adventurous as the 'cave-men' of the West. He's too good a gentleman."

"Why should the sheik go chasing white women in the desert?" His own women are far more beautiful. A flirtation with a sheik would be a milk-and-water affair, for sheiks may love to fight, but they are lazy lovers. For sheer fire in love-making, commend me to the men of the West.

"It's a prosaic but true fact that the best sheiks have but one wife. A good-looking wife of the high classes would not for a moment tolerate a rival in her husband's affections. Again, divorce is very easy. You cannot beat a pretty wife where that is the case."

"Of course there are sheiks and sheiks; but the sheik of the novel and the screen is almost always an inferior sort of fellow. He may be a shopkeeper keeping four wives—the Mohammedan allowance for the purpose of attracting customers to his shop."

"The real sheik models his life on the ideals of 100 years ago. He is a gentleman with an old-world courtesy which our advanced civilization seems to have forgotten."

"So it comes about that the harems today are not full of beautiful houis but of his own relatives aunts, nieces, cousins, grandmothers it may be, and a relatives of his wife. It is a disgrace to the sheik for any one of them to be in want."

Ourselfs and Industry The Corporation as a Stage in Progress By E. E. Lincoln

In a previous talk something was said about "Sharing the Risk with Others," and it was pointed out that only by "cooperation in investment"—that is, by wide distribution of ownership—as well as by cooperation in effort, can we reap the advantages of modern civilization.

Most large business undertakings are now organized as "corporations," operating under a legal authorization known as a "charter" or "certificate of incorporation." This authorization is granted by the state upon compliance with certain conditions, and confers upon the corporation the right to exist and to do certain things as a legal "person" responsible for all its acts. The persons who associate themselves together in this way are the stockholders, or owners.

Some of the distinguishing features of the corporation as a form of business organization, which may also be regarded as advantageous, are the following:

1. The corporation is permanent, unless dissolved by its owners or voluntarily limited in duration by its charter. Its activity, therefore, does not depend upon the life or ownership of any particular individual.
2. Because of the comparative ease with which ownership in the average corporation can be acquired or transferred, large-scale operations are facilitated and flexibility in financing is assured.
3. In many cases it is probable that a business organized as a corporation has a superior opportunity to secure efficiency in management.

The corporation is controlled by its owners, the stockholders, whether many or few. If there are only a few of them they may elect themselves directors once a year and personally run the business. When there are many stockholders, however, those holding the majority interest usually select prominent business men who have had experience to act as directors for them.

Although the directors decide general policies at their regular meetings, they are legally acting as agents of the stockholders and may be dismissed if the majority stockholders do not approve their policies.

The larger a company grows, the more impossible it is for the directors to familiarize themselves with all the details of the company's operations. Hence, they appoint a president and frequently other senior officers, who are not necessarily members of the board of directors. These in turn appoint and employ all other assistants and workers.

In past years one of the important and not infrequent disadvantages of large corporations has been the natural tendency toward "absentee ownership"—that is, the more important stockholders have frequently been largely dissociated from the actual management and operation of the business, and have exercised their control in an indirect and more or less impersonal manner.

The dangers in such a situation have been pointed out by forward-looking business men and economists during the past 150 years. In a word, these disadvantages in the earlier days were perhaps due to an over-emphasis of routine methods and organization practices, the purpose of which was not made sufficiently clear to the average employee. As a result, many misunderstandings, sometimes arose, and individual initiative was not always properly directed.

However, changes in the character of ownership of corporations have been taking place very rapidly but quietly during the past decade. The number of stockholders of all corporations has vastly increased, and the average number of shares per stockholder has decreased.

It is even more important to note that this extension of ownership, particularly in our great public utility enterprises, is due primarily to the fact that customers are investing their money in the corporations which serve them, and employees are buying stock in the corporations for which they work.

This means that those who produce the service and those who consume it have a very direct and mutual interest in seeing that money and effort are expended in such a manner as to produce the best results. It means, further, that those who are employed by corporations, from office boy to president, are becoming in a very real sense partners in business together since each owns a portion of the business.

This ownership interest is not merely a privilege, but also a grave responsibility. Every stockholder should understand that as an owner he has duties to perform as well as dividends to collect. The more intelligent the performance of his duties, the higher in the long run will be the dividends which he receives.

An employee-stockholder can render his best service to his company and thereby to himself by understanding thoroughly his own work in relation to the work of his associates, by getting a clear picture of what the policies of his company are, and also what they should be, and giving that constant thought to his work which will enable him to develop into a better job. Short of this, an employee-stockholder, should be satisfied.

MECHANICS LOSE CLOSE GAME TO REFINERY, 2 TO 1

AUTRY'S HOMER BRINGS IN THE WINNING RUN

Mechanics Lose First Game Since Twilight League Started Last Month

"Twas a grand old ball game last night and for once in the season the league-leading Mechanics, were downed by the Refinery by a score of 2 to 1. Who was the hero of the game? No one else but Chick Autry, the bouncing youngster in baseball circles. Chick did the dirty work and for ever and aye his name will rank with that of the Casey, who got his revenge.

The game started, for once promptly at five o'clock and for four innings neither team was able to break the deadlock. With the Refinery at bat, two men out and McCoy on base, Potts, lanky catcher for the Refinery, scored his play mate with a well placed single into right.

So much for that. The Mechanics then tried their damnest and for some time it would look as if they were going to succeed for Frank Wolfram, pitching for the Refinery had begun to weaken and the Meck-nicks were nipping him for some neat bingles.

In the seventh inning, the Mechanics at bat, two men out, Todd Murray stepped up to the plate. Murray got his hit, a nice single to center. Pat O'Rourke stepped up and at the second strike, Murray decided to go to second, hesitated, turned back, and then went into high and was off for second. Potts almost threw his arm out of joint with a bad peg to second. Murray then scrambled to his feet and made third. O'Rourke, seeing his duty, done it with a single to center. Murray trotted home and the fans started rejoicing.

Van Arsdale then singled to left and O'Rourke was thrown out at third after a hard try. The fans, who had arisen to their feet to go home, came back and took their seats. Now would be one "them thar" nine inning games.

Chick Autry was the first man up for the Refinery. He clutched the bat in his big hands and—Zowie! the ball cleared the right field fence with plenty of room to spare. There went the old ball game.

The funny part about it was that Autry hasn't been hitting anything so far this season, and the blow he got last night was as much as a surprise to him as it was to the fans.

The game was one of the best ones that has been staged on that field for some time. Both pitchers, Kogler and Wolfram hurled a good brand of ball and both teams gave a good exhibition of fast and furious ball.

No inning lasted over ten minutes and each play was executed in real style.

OAKS

Well the Oaks have finally jangled and jugged around until they are now in fourth place in the league standings. The Oakland club seems to have a habit of fooling around, first in the cellar and then on top of the list. They will keep at this until about the end of the season when they are way down on the bottom of the list and then they will start and fight like the devil to get back to the top of the alphabet.

TENNIS

Mary K. Browne and Mlle. Lenglen will meet in Paris today in the semi-finals of the hard courts championship. It is reported that Helen Wills will be able to leave the hospital at Neuilly on Sunday and from there she will go to Paris. In the meantime the American tennis fans are wondering how Miss Browne will come out in her match with Suzanne. If she should, by any chance, defeat the French champion, Helen may lose her great popularity.

TO SWIM CHANNEL

Now that the summer months are peeping around, the American girl swimmers are bundling up their one-piece suits and are hitting for dear old England to try to swim the English channel. Miss Gertrude Lederle, who is at the present time in Paris has announced that she will try the difficult feat early in July if the conditions permit. She has declared she will start immediately for Cape Felix to start training for the long and tiresome swim.

HURLERS ARRIVE

The much heralded Tipperary hurlers arrived in San Francisco yesterday and were given a big hand by that city. The hurlers will meet the California All Stars on Sunday at the San Francisco Stadium. Since their arrival in this country the Irish have defeated some of the best teams in the east and are out to defeat the best teams that west will send up against them.

MAC LOSES CUP

Poor Mac Smith, he has been notified that the cup he fought so hard to win at Youngstown last year has disappeared from the clubhouse at Lakeside, N. Y. The wire sent to Mac by the western golf association told him that the cup is recovered by insurance and it is not found soon, it will be replaced.

2 Drayage Permits Have Been Denied

Permission to operate an auto truck service between Alameda, Oakland, Berkeley, Richmond, Stockton, Santa Rosa, Sacramento, San Francisco, Santa Cruz and points within a radius of 150 miles from San Francisco was yesterday denied the Walkup Drayage and Warehouse company by the state railroad commission.

The petition of the Nolan Drayage and Warehouse for a freight service between Oakland, Piedmont, Berkeley, Richmond, Albany, San Francisco and other points was also denied by the commission.

Helen Wills Leaves Hospital

PARIS, June 10.—Helen Wills, American tennis star had her first walk today since she was operated upon recently for appendicitis. She traveled the corridors and balcony of the American hospital this afternoon.

Helen was the recipient of flowers from the surgeon who operated upon her. Dr. Thierry Martell said: "Never in my long surgical career have I seen such a quick recovery and such perfect physical condition."

Tonight Helen insisted that she feels perfectly able to go by motor car tomorrow to the Bois du Bolagne to witness the women tennis matches.

Camel is the smoker's sign of friendship

IN THE home, or at the club—in busy office or crowded street—whenever friend meets friend, you will hear that magic invitation—have a Camel!

And wherever Camels are lighted, men come together in more friendly understanding. No other cigarette ever had or made so many friends or brought so much added friendliness to the world as Camel, for Camel's quality is a universal language.

Camel is more than a cigarette. It is an experience in smoking enjoyment—the finest this old earth affords. Camels contain the choicest Turkish and Domestic tobaccos grown, and these fine tobaccos are superbly blended, as in no other cigarette. The enjoyment of Camels goes on forever, for they never tire the taste no matter how liberally you smoke them. They simply never leave a cigarettey after-taste. No other cigarette in the world is like them. Millions of experienced smokers who could well afford to pay more will buy and smoke only Camels.

Whenever and wherever you meet a friend, let that be a standing invitation to the sheerest enjoyment that ever came from a cigarette.

Have a Camel!
